Over generations, farmers meticulously transformed the landscape, sculpting vast terraces on the hillsides to optimize grapevine growth, leveraging both water sources below and sunlight above.

Even today, the production of port wine remains a testament to unwavering passion, with grapes meticulously hand-picked and crushed in the age-old tradition — by foot! Moreover, the Douro River claims the title of the Iberian Peninsula's largest river by discharge. Originating near Duruelo de la Sierra in Spain's Soria province, it charts a winding path southward before flowing westward through the northern reaches of the Meseta Central in Castile and León, ultimately traversing northern Portugal.
